North Adelaide Golf Course – North Course

NORTH
ADELAIDE
GOLF COURSE

In September 1895, golf was played in Adelaide's northwest parkland opposite 'Montefiore', the home of prominent Adelaide solicitor William Pope. The rough-and-ready 9-hole course was colloquially known as 'Willy Pope's Links'. Due to increased council regulation of parkland usage, the North Adelaide Golf Club was officially formed in 1905. Unsurprisingly, William Pope was the club's inaugural president. Scottish-Australian professional Edgar C. Martin was commissioned to design the initial 18-hole course, from then known as 'Montefiore Links'. In 1922, the Adelaide City Council took over the links as a public facility, to which the North Adelaide Golf Club received priority. Part of the deal was for the council to develop a second 18-hole course. Designed by local golfing prodigy Rufus Stewart, the second course is now known as the North Course.

The Course: Rated among the top 50 courses nationwide, Port Fairy Golf Links winds its way over an imposing natural dune system adjacent to Port Fairy Bay. While appearing to be age-old, the links opened in 1963 as a member-designed, nine-hole layout. In 1985, the course was extended to eighteen holes to a design by 1958 Australian Amateur Champion Kevin Hartley. Since 2000, a later winner of the Australian Amateur Championship, Mike Clayton (1978), has been advising the club on course design and conditioning.
